Recognize & Engage Your

Glue Employees.

A team member who multiples everyone else's results by helping the team win.

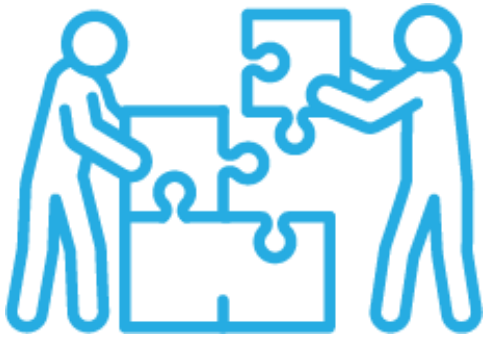

About the Glue Employees

Quiet leaders who anticipate needs, take action, help employees do their best – often without seeking recognition.

Their priority is progress not attention.

How to identify glue employees:

- In interviews: They will describe how they helped a team, helped coordinate many moving pieces, or was a mentor.
- Ask: Ask your teams, "Who helps you the most?" "Who watches out for you?"

Source: Wall Street Journal (10.12.25)

Glue Employees Often Go Unnoticed

- Glue work doesn't show up in most metrics (sales closed, products shipped, campaigns launched).
- Leaders can change that putting value on glue behaviors.

Ask employees who helped them succeed.

Create peer nominated "glue awards."

Provide "team awards" to recognize everyone who played a role in the success.

Engagement & Remote Work

HR Trends survey participants report challenges with maintaining culture and engagement with remote or hybrid work.

Workers still desire remote work and flexibility. A recent survey by Bospar, reported remote and hybrid employees experience…

- Greater productivity at home. (61%)
- Improved work-life balance. (81%)
- Would be less likely to apply for jobs without remote job options. (63%)

Source:2026 HR Trends Survey, Bospar; Forbes

Strategies to Improve Engagement with a Remote or Hybrid Workplace

- Regular Check-ins: Focus on regular check-ins whether in-person or virtually.
- Strong Communication: Have strong communication through multiple channels (teams, email, video, intranet).
- Events: Provide team and cross-functional team events.
- Remote and Hybrid Strategy: have clarity and accountability.

Remember the Deskless Worker.

Roles where remote work is not an option.

(manufacturing workers, nurses, lab/research, retail, customer service, etc.)

To accommodate the needs of “deskless" workers, employers can imagine what flexibility means.

Flexibility goes beyond remote work

- Predictable scheduling and shift-swapping tools
- Expanding benefits to address deskless workers’ specific needs
- Creating clear career pathways that don’t depend on physical presence
- Establishing structured mentoring programs to replace informal development opportunities typically available to office workers.
